what countries schedule a "sun up meeting"

A "sun up meeting" is typically an early morning meeting, often scheduled at the start of the workday. This term is most commonly used in some parts of the United States, especially in industries where early starts are common, such as construction, agriculture, and certain corporate settings. However, other countries might have similar practices under different names. Here are a few examples:

1. United States: Common in various industries, particularly in sectors that start work early, such as construction and tech.
2. United Kingdom: Early morning meetings are common, particularly in sectors like finance and media.
3. Japan: Known for its early start in many companies, morning meetings (朝礼, chōrei) are a traditional practice in many workplaces.
4. Germany: Early morning meetings are common in both corporate and industrial sectors, emphasizing punctuality and efficiency.
5. Australia: Early meetings are typical in industries like mining, construction, and agriculture.

These meetings are scheduled to align with the start of the workday to ensure that everyone is on the same page and ready for the day's activities.
